Siletz U. S. Indian Agency.
 EDITOR GAZETTE: As it is Christmas time, the season that, perhaps, more than any other, brings to our minds memories of other days and friends most dear; it would seem a fit time for correspondence.

It has been my intention, ever since I came on this reservation, as soon as I was sufficiently acquainted to enable me to give a correct statement, and put a just estimate on the condition of things here, to write an article for your paper; and right here I am admonished, by a correspondent of the Salem Statesman, "that no reliance whatever can be placed in statements that go out from this reservation," they being such exaggerations. I shall feel somewhat relieved from any fear of this point in writing for your paper, knowing that most of your readers are sufficiently acquainted with me to enable them to make all due allowance for the "exaggeration."

As a general rule, the Indians here are industrious and are trying to make a living for themselves; they no more live in groups, as separate tribes, but have, nearly all of them, or at least the heads of families, taken their land as surveyed, and have built houses on the same and are making, some more and some less, improvements. I cannot say just how many houses there are, I counted something over a hundred and twenty, last Summer, soon after I came here, and they are constantly building as fast as the mill can supply lumber. These houses range all the way from twelve to forty feet square, up to one eighteen to thirty feet, with a kitchen running back with porch and wood shed. Quite a number of them have good barns, with granaries to hold their crops. Some of them still make their beds on the floor, while perhaps one-third have bedsteads and tables, and perhaps one-fourth of them have their cooking stoves; and, indeed, some of their houses would lose nothing by comparison with many of the whites. As a general rule they go decently dressed, and many of them are extravagant in dress, wearing clothes that are more costly than their circumstances would justify; in this respect they are about like white people.

The school is in a prosperous condition, for an Indian school; an average daily attendance of over fifty children, five or six of these are white children, belonging to employes. As for the progress of the children, all things considered, it is all that could be expected. In order to obviate the difficulty arising from the distance that many of the children have to come to school, provision is made to furnish them their dinners, in the shape of a lunch, and they are furnished, to some extent, with clothing, and the little girls are taught to make their own clothes. Steps are being taken to build a boarding house, the material for which is mostly on the ground, and, as I understand, the carpenters are only waiting for the foundation to be laid, to raise the building; when this is done the school will be converted into a manual labor school, where the girls will be educated in all the arts of house-keeping while the boys will be required to work on the farm, or at trades, and all will be kept at the school and away from the influences of their former Indian habits.

We have a well organized church, under the efficient and zealous labors of Rev. T. F. Royal, aided and sustained by most of the employes, in which our excellent agent takes a very deep interest, and is a most effective worker. I cannot see but the Indians are as orderly in their deportment as the whites, and as sincere in their professions. I know of but one standard by which we can judge of the genuineness of any man's religion, and I did not make that standard. "Judge the tree by its fruits," is the only rule I know, and tested by this rule, the Indians here lose nothing by comparison with whites. In the application of any rule, we must ever bear in mind "that where little is given little is required." As for the progress in industrial pursuits, it is certainly onward. By a late circular to the agent, each employe is required to take two apprentices, to be instructed in the different departments of labor.

We also have, by instructions from Washington, a police force, whose duty it is to keep order on the reservation, which is divided into districts, and each district is assigned to a policeman, who reports to the Chief of Police, who is a white man and one of the employes. The remainder of the force are Indians. This works admirably. It has had a good effect, so far, in checking crime on the reservation, and we recently had a fine illustration of its beneficial effects on a certain class of white men. Not long since a white man came on the reservation about noon, and stopped at an Indian house, in sight of and within a mile of the agency. The Indian tried to get him to go to the agency, but he refused. So when it was dark the Indian, fearing that this man was after no good, gave notice to the police, whereupon he was arrested, and in the absence of the agent, brought up to headquarters; and not being able to give a satisfactory reason for his conduct, was, by the writer of this article, as Chief of Police, and ex-officio agent in the absence of Mr. Bagley, ordered to be placed in the guard house until morning, when he was taken out, given his breakfast, and sent under the escort of an Indian policeman, off the reservation. While on his way, he confessed to the Indian that his object was to get a squaw for a wife, and live among the Indians; that he had had one squaw wife and wanted another. This is the man that the correspondent of the Salem Statesman says got "lost and wandered here," and gives a doleful account of our unchristian treatment of a poor wanderer. If these lines should chance to be read by that correspondent, who signs his name "A-meri-cus," or any other cus, be it known to him or any such sympathizers with this class of persons that got lost and find their way here, on the same business, that they shall be furnished with the same kind of quarters. Whether the Indians here are making advancement in other respects, or not, they do not propose to furnish any more wives to men that call themselves white, and yet are too low down to get wives among their own people.

Now, I would like to tell you a great deal more, but I have already made this article too long; but next time you visit the Bay, just come up and see us, and we will show you over the reservation, and then you can judge for yourself. We cordially invite all candid persons, that desire to know how things are managed here, to come and see for themselves. This is the way to get at the truth. Those persons who are writing against the Agency and representing it as a failure, as a rule, will be found to be either employes that have been discharged for cause, or persons aspiring to places here and have failed to get them. Yours truly,
 JOHN BOSWELL, Agency Physician.

A Parable on Tobacco.
 Then shall the kingdom of Satan be likened unto a grain of tobacco seed, which, though exceedingly small, being cast into the ground, grew and became a great plant, and spread its leaves rank and broad, so that huge and vile worms found a habitation thereon. And it came to pass, in the course of time, that the sound upon looking upon it, and thought it beautiful to look upon, and much to be desired to make lads look big and manly.

So they put forth their hand, and did chew thereof. And soon it made sick, and others to vomit most filthily. And it further came to pass, that those who chewed it became weak and unmanly, and said, We are envious, said the some. Nay, High doiled them, and thought it beautiful to look upon, and much to be desired to make lads look big and manly.

And the months of all that were enslaved became foul, and they were seized with a violent spitting; and they did spit even in ladies' parlors and in the house of the Lord of lords, and the saints of the Most High were greatly plagued thereby.

And, in the course of time, it came also to pass that others, who were wise, were taken suddenly with fits, and they did sneeze with a great and mighty noise, insomuch that their eyes were filled with tears, and they did look exceedingly silly.

And yet others, among the fire of these, taken suddenly with fits, and they did sneeze with a great and mighty noise, insomuch that their eyes were filled with tears, and they did look exceedingly silly.

And the cultivation thereof became a great and mighty business in the earth; and the merchants thereof, and it came to pass, that the smoke thereof, when it was inhaled, made the lungs of those who inhaled it, to cough and spit, and it made the mouth of those who inhaled it, to be filled with a great and mighty noise, insomuch that their eyes were filled with tears, and they did look exceedingly silly.

PUT TO THE TEST.
 "But, suppose he should recognize me after all, Helen?"
 "Not a bit of danger of that, May, you are too well 'got up,' thanks to your humble servant."

"Well, let me take a long, last lingering look at myself, and I'm off!"—and she stepped to the glass and surveyed herself. She gave a little laugh. "Ugh! how my teeth gleam through my dusky complexion. We must remember that. Go, down and bring me some walnut juice."

The desired fluid was brought, and enough partaken of to bring the gleaming to an odor not conceivably observable through contrast with the general appearance of the person.

"There you are, May, so transformed by your own father wouldn't recognize you. Complexion utterly changed, eyebrows blackened, hair tucked out of sight under a widow's cap, seedy black dress and worn cotton gloves. Who would look for the rich and flattered heiress in this guise? Here, let me adjust your veil. There, you'll do now for a poor widow of 35, I think."

"Well, Helen, I hope that we may find that Henry Smith has been slandered," was the rejoinder; "but I could never promise to marry him with such a doubt unsolved."

"No indeed, May. But go, my blessings will follow you," she added, laughing.

Down the back stairs stole the quiet, poverty-stricken looking little woman, and gained the street by a back alley. Drawing her rusty cape veil closely down over her face, she walked slowly along till she reached the door which bore the name of "H. Smith, Solicitor." Ascending, she stood at the office door and tapped timidly.

"Come in," was the rejoinder from within.

Timidly and tremblingly May pushed open the office door of the man who had but the day previously besought her to become his wife.

Henry Smith sat at a table which was strewn with law papers, his feet thrown over the arm of a chair and a half consumed cigar in his teeth. Casting a glance at the meek looking little figure before him, which glance seemed to assure him that there was no call for politeness on his part, he leaned back in his chair and remarked:

"Well, madame, what do you wish?"

"Can this be the exquisite Mr. Smith, who is so courteous to ladies in society?" thought she. But she said in a voice that trembled from suppressed excitement, "Will you please let me be seated a moment, sir? I am not strong, and the stairs have taken my breath."

"Chairs over by the window there," was the reply, but he never lowered his feet from the one on which they rested, or laid aside his cigar.

After a moment's pause, in which the pale, dark woman seemed to collect her thoughts and composure, she said, drawing a paper from her pocket:

devoted and polite to me, when it is all false to his true nature! Thank heaven! I've found him out in time."

Helen laughed softly and said: "What answer shall you give him this evening, May?"

"Wait until evening, and see," was the reply, as May went on with her becoming toilet.

Meanwhile Henry Smith, after mentally condemning all beggars to torture, slowly betook himself to his lodgings, and arrayed himself for the purpose of calling to receive his answer from the young lady of his affections; but in the midst of thoughts of her, the pale face of the dark little widow would intrude herself.

"Confound that creature!" soliloquized he, as he neared the mansion. "I can't keep her out of my mind. There was something familiar about her, as if I had known her some time. But pshaw! who has any sympathy for beggars? I shall be one myself if I don't get this girl of old Bailey's with her father's cash."

Ring the bell, the servant showed him into a brilliantly lighted drawing room, where in silk and jewels, shone the fair young girl whom he had asked to be his wife.

She rose to meet him, and he eagerly began:

"Dearest May, I am all impatience for your answer. Don't keep me in suspense another moment. Is the treasure mine?"

With painful distinctness every word of the answer smote upon his ear.

"O dear! I wish beggars could be abolished by statute."

He opened his eyes and stared at her; then the truth seemed to burst upon him.

"May!—Miss Bailey!" he gasped; "what is this?"

"Really, sir, your story is well gotten up, but so far as I am concerned, no beggars need apply."

Catching up his hat, Henry Smith left the house in such a hurry that he had time to snatch a look at the hen and her money, let us hope he gained in wisdom and charity.
